This is an expanding opportunity. More and more of the double income, time poor executive class are looking for cleaning and concierge services, for people who will stand in for them to do the essential time-consuming jobs like run errands, attend to flowers, wait for tradespersons ...

Recent articles in The Age and the Herald Sun highlighted the needs of stressed-out Gen Xers juggling the demands of high powered careers with commitments to spending quality time with their families and friends. Household tasks and cleaning are high on the list of items these people feel are either better done by an expert or that they would rather spend their time doing something else.

We have the experience to mentor you to your own successful franchise.
